Wealthy, widowed, athletic male seeks well-educated Seattle or Vancouver beauty

BY ATHIMA CHANSANCHAI
P-I reporter

Single Seattle women, dust off your résumés and head shots, put on your power outfits and engage your best interview personae for the casting call of a lifetime.

The position: soul mate.

It's not a new reality show. But it could be one woman's reality if she catches the right vibe from New York-based professional matchmaker Janis Spindel, who will fly into Seattle on Monday to screen potential brides for a 40-something Vancouver, B.C., entrepreneur.

Did we mention he's a self-made multimillionaire?

"This guy is from Vancouver and he said there are droves of single, gorgeous women in Seattle," said Spindel, whose services, she says, have rendered 760 couples into nuptial bliss since 1993. Despite the statistical improbability, the former fashion exec claims not one divorce in her matchmaking record.

"It's almost like an open casting call for awesome, awesome women, who are not only very attractive but very, very well educated and live a healthy lifestyle," Spindel said. "I go and I find them. I leave no stone unturned until I find them."

To be considered a match for the mysterious bachelor, you are:

- ▶ Older than 28 (30-somethings, rejoice!)
- ▶ Someone who can keep up with a very athletic guy
- ▶ A "sophisticated but understated upscale professional"
- ▶ A non-smoker (not a deal breaker, but preferable)
- ▶ Seeking "a committed relationship"
